The process of community college contingency (or adjunct) faculty cracking open that hard nut and landing that elusive full-time position at a community college can often be daunting and challenging. This panel will help break down and discuss some strategies and techniques that have been used by candidates to successfully join the labor market. | of full time/tenure track community college professors. Among the questions that will be addressed are: What can graduate students looking toward a CC/teaching driven academic career do to make them viable candidates on the job market? How can contingency faculty improve their CV’s/applications to stand out as strong candidates to be selected for an interview? What should candidates selected for an interview expect to encounter during the interview process? What kinds of questions should they prepare for? Does having a ., as opposed to an M.A., matter to search committees?

Panelists: Peter Bowman (Palomar College), Kenneth Chaiprasert (East Los Angeles College), Elsa Dias (Pikes Peak Community College), Fred Monardi (College of Southern Nevada)

Chair: Steven Cauchon (steven.cauchon@imperial.edu), Imperial Valley College

<th>Session 2.2: “The Challenges &amp; Rewards of a Community College Career”</th>
</tr>
</thead>
| Being a political science professor at a community college is very different from an academic career at a four year/research institution. Those considering a career at the two-year level should know both the challenges and rewards of teaching at a community college. This panel will address important questions and matters that will help would-be community college faculty to make the decision to join the profession. Among the topics discussed will be: How different and important is teaching and pedagogy at the Community College level, compared to the four-year level? Can a community college political scientist also have a research agenda? How different is the critical mass of a Community College student population from university students in terms of academic preparation and demographic factors such as socio-economic status, age, ethnicity, etc.? What kind of administrative duties should a CC faculty member expect to encounter, in terms of institutional service and shared governance?

Panelists: Rogelio Garcia (East Los Angeles College), Jeffrey Hernandez (East Los Angeles College), Maria Quintero (East Los Angeles College), Kelly Velasquez (East Los Angeles College)

Chair: Kenneth Chaiprasert (chaiprkv@elac.edu), East Los Angeles College

Session 2.3: “Failing the Grade: How Lack of Faculty Diversity Hurts Our Students and Our Discipline”

A recent study on the lack of diversity in the California Community College system reveals that “…today 69% of students enrolled in college in California are ethnically or racially diverse, yet over 60% of college faculty and senior leadership on California’s campuses and 74% of Academic Senators are White.” These statistics are not exclusive to California. They are a part of a national problem of exclusion. This panel seeks to engage in a productive dialogue on the causes of exclusion of faculty in community college throughout the country as well as its potential negative effects on the students that we serve.

Panelists: Rosalinda M. Valenzuela (Collin College), TBD

Chair: Natalina Monteiro (monteint@elac.edu), East Los Angeles College

Session 2.4: Major Danger: What Community College Faculty Can Do to Mentor Political Science Majors – A Student, Faculty Perspective

This panel seeks to share strategies employed by various community college partners in mentoring political science students. Also, the discussants will draw from their own experiences of navigating through the community college system and how they arrived at political science as a major. The panel will include current community college students and faculty. Among the questions that will be explored will include, what can be done to recruit more students of color into majoring in political science? What are some best practices for explain political science to interested students? Perhaps most importantly of all, how can community colleges (faculty, administration, etc) provide a realistic picture of political science career options?

Panelists: Robert Morin (Western Nevada College), Erich Frankland (Casper College), Rogelio Garcia (East Los Angeles College), Felipe Agredano (East Los Angeles College); community college students TBD

Chair: Fred Monardi (fred.monardi@csn.edu), College of Southern Nevada
